Overview and Criteria

Overview

This scholarship was established in 1992 in memory of Horace and Susie Revels Cayton. At the turn of the century, the Revels were editors of a popular political newspaper, The Seattle Republican. In later life, after publishing Cayton's Weekly, the couple turned their publishing expertise into a public relations business and were likely Seattle's first minority public relations practitioners. Each year the chapter seeks to recognize a minority student from Washington who demonstrates academic achievement, a desire to practice public relations and financial need.

Criteria

- Minority status – African American, Asian American, Hispanic/Latino American, Native American, Pacific Islander
- Interest and aptitude in public relations demonstrated by courses taken, activities and/or internships
- Full-time sophomore or junior in the 2006-2007 academic year pursuing a career in public relations who will be a full-time junior or senior during the 2007-2008 academic year at a Washington state college or university (Washington state students attending college out-of-state also may apply if they graduated from a Washington high school or a parent currently lives in Washington state year-round.)
- Academic achievement
- Financial need (FAFSA not required)
- Have overcome barriers in pursuit of personal or academic goals

Applicants must include a certified college transcript with the application. (Allow two weeks for universities to process transcripts.) Scholarship funds will be paid to the appropriate university department and credited to the recipient. See attached application form for more information.

Take special care to review your application to assure it is complete and error free. Your application will be reviewed by public relations professionals and will be held to a high professional standard. Incomplete applications will be disqualified.
