President's message

The shorter, cooler days are definitely showing us that we are in fall. Contrast the colorful leaves with the prevalent rain - they are both signs of autumn in the Northwest. A bright spot this fall is the prevalence of stellar programs and events at PRSA. Beginning with a social and program in the South Sound, October is a chock full month.

At our Annual Luncheon Oct. 16, learn how media executives and editors plan for today and tomorrow, and where PR professionals fit into the landscape. In the South Sound, learn to prepare for a disaster, no matter the size or degree.

October also brings the PRSA International Conference - this year in Philadelphia Oct. 27-29 - after which attendees will bring back learnings to our members. APR Readiness reviews are this month, and you can also sign up for a morning with a man with a great pitching record - with media, that is - Michael Smart, Nov. 14.

Find it all here and on the website. And get ready for a jam-packed fall!

Annual Luncheon Oct. 16

Moonscape or fertile ground? Media landscape 2023

What will the media landscape look like 5 to 10 years from now? Traditional news media have served as the connecting rods in U.S. communities for many years - print media for more than 200 years in North America alone.

How are print and electronic media connecting people with the issues and important events in their communities today, and how will that change by 2020 and beyond? Our panel of media executives and editors talk about what keeps them up nights - how they are helping to shape the landscape as well as respond to the evolutionary changes in the way news is sent and received. How are they assuring that their medium exists and thrives in the future? What are the implications for public relations? Join executives from the region's major media outlets in this provocative discussion.

Our panelists:

- Jim Simon, assistant managing editor, Seattle Times
- George Erb, editor, Puget Sound Business Journal
- Jennifer King, Social Media producer, KING 5 TV
- David Zeeck, publisher, The News Tribune
- Moderator: John Kvasnosky, Communications director, Boeing Capital Corporation

Local PRSA Diversity Committee asks students to consider a PR career

On Sept. 19, more than 35 high school students took on the role of PR professionals, handling an imaginary crisis scenario of a fire breaking out at the Seattle Space Needle. The students were taking part in a PR workshop at the 2013 Journalism Day seminar at University of Washington.

Seattle veteran public relations and marketing consultants Bill Southern and Annie Kuo informed the students about the variety of careers PR offers and then guided them through the crisis scenario. Kuo and Southern commented that the enthusiasm and interest of the students was "impressive."

The Puget Sound PRSA Diversity Committee conducts outreach sessions with young people throughout the year, with the aim of encouraging culturally diverse students to join the profession-and PRSA. To learn more about the Diversity Committee or to volunteer to do presentations to youth, contact Shirley Skeel, media relations manager at University of Puget Sound at sskeel@pugetsound.edu or 253.879.2611.
